Old friends, new ideas at Santa Fe conference

New Mexico Press Women's 2018 annual spring conference showcased writers and writing in Santa Fe.

Conferences are a chance to catch up with old friends. And we find that no matter how experienced we think we are, we can always learn something new.

Caroline Fraser

It began with a conversation between author Hampton Sides (Blood and Thunder, Ghost Soldiers, among others) and Sherri Burr.

Sara Solovich, editor of Searchlight New Mexico, who explored a new path for journalists who want to work on longer investigative pieces.

A panel discussion on creating narratives featured Cindy Nava, a DACA recipient and national motivational speaker who writes for the Huffington Post; Karen Jones Meadows, a nationally known playwright whose play "Harriet's Return: Based Upon the Legendary Life of Harriet Tubman has been performed throughout the world"; and Lorene Mills, host of "Report from Santa Fe."

Simon Romero, Southwest Bureau Chief for the New York Times, brought a disturbing perspective to current effects.

Our banquet speaker was Caroline Fraser, who had just won the Pulitzer Prize for biography for Prairie Fires: The American Dreams of Laura Ingalls Wilder.

Jessica Savage honored as Communicator of Achievement

Jessica Savage, of Las Cruces, is the 2018 Communicator of Achievement.

A scholarship advisor in the College of Arts and Sciences at New Mexico State University, she oversees scholarships for more than 300 students in 24 departments. She is also the media and communications director for the National Public Observatory, publicizing astronomy outreach programs.

Jessica, an award-winning journalist with 17 years of experience in media relations, has also contributed to Desert Exposure and Las Cruces Magazine.

She has extensive experience in data management and retrieval systems, including a position with the Chihuahuan Desert Network, an inventory and monitoring arm of the National Park Service.

For NMPW, Jessica has been Zia Award chair and is currently public relations chair.

Zia Award presented to Northern New Mexican

Anita Rodriguez, a Ranchos de Taos author whose culturally divergent family melded around recipes, won the Zia Book Award for her Coyota in the Kitchen: A Memoir of New and Old Mexico (UNM Press, 2016).

"I wanted to write about my family," she said. "I wanted to write about New Mexico. I wanted to write about cultural conflict and confluence."

- Lesley Poling-Kempes, of Abiquiú, Ladies of the Canyons: A League of Extraordinary Women and Their Adventures in the American Southwest.

Dede Feldman, Anita Rodriguez, Lesley Poling-Kempes, Patricia Conoway

Her father was a dirt-poor northern New Mexican, and her mother, a Southern aristocrat.

"The family was so disparate, we covered such a wide range of classes and cultures, that there seemed no way to tie together all these stories except with something that all us had in common," she said. "That was food."

Zia finalists were:

• Patricia J. Conoway, of Cerrillos, Listening With My Eyes: An Abused Horse. A Mother with Alzheimer's. The Journey to Help Them Both.

• Dede Feldman, of Albuquerque, Another Way Forward: Grassroots Solutions from New Mexico.

• Dede Feldman, of Albuquerque, Another Way Forward: Grassroots Solutions from New Mexico.

Zia Chair Bill Diven accepted 29 nonfiction entries and disqualified two others.

2018 New Mexico Press Women Elected Officers

New officers elected by acclamation are President Sherri Burr, Vice President Damien Willis, Treasurer Loretta Hall, and Secretary Carol Kreis.

They serve for two years.

Sherri Burr is the Regents Professor of Law at UNM Law School, where for 30 years she taught intellectual property law, art law, entertainment law, international law, among other courses. She was also producer and host of "ARTS TALK," a weekly television show. She is an award-winning author of numerous legal and business books. Now book tentatively communications for the Previously, he was public District Attorney's Office

Damien has been secretary of Las Cruces Press Women for five years and NMPW for two years.

Loretta Hall has written eight nonfiction books, the last four of which were about outer space travel, as well as numerous magazine articles and book chapters. Loretta is immediate past president and a former treasurer and Zia Book Award chair. She was named the 2016 NMPW and National Federation of Press Women Communicator of Achievement.

Carol Kreis has been an educator, public relations coordinator for the Rio Grande Zoo, and a writer and researcher of educational materials for the Newsweek Education Program. She managed the Newspapers-in-Education program for the Albuquerque Journal and the Tribune and was a founding co-director of UNM's Rio Grande Writing Project.

Carol has been NMPW treasurer and was Communicator of Achievement in 2013.

New president announces plans for the coming year

President Sherri Burr wants NMPW to host a convention of the National Federation of Press Women in 2021.

"The last national conference in 1980 brought close to 300 journalists from around the nation to our state and netted a healthy balance to the NMPW treasury," she says.

Sherri wants to reinvigorate the High School Contest by securing a sponsor to pay all the fees and a chair with connections to the high schools with journalism programs.

She also wants to work with chapters to identify speakers of interests to journalists and writers in attractive venues.

Communications Contest Winners Announced

Megan Kamerick won first place in overall excellence for her awards in the 2018 Communications Contest. Heath Haussamen was second in individual overall excellence, and Ruth Friesen was third. Colleen Keane and Sherry Robinson tied for an honorable mention.

The overall excellence award is tallied on points earned in individual categories. Ruth was one point behind Heath, and Colleen was two points behind Ruth.

In organizational awards, New Mexico Political Report won first place for overall excellence, Rio Grande Books was second, and New Mexico In Depth was third.

Megan Kamerick, Heath Haussamen, Ruth Friesen

NMPW received 173 entries from 58 entrants in 126 categories in the annual communications contest.

Chair Carolyn Carlson recruited judges from across the nation, including journalism professors and other educators, working broadcasters from top markets, published authors, award-winning public relations professionals, and other accomplished media professionals.

"From what I could see, New Mexico has abundant talent with many excellent people doing great work on all kinds of media platforms," Carolyn said.

NMPW awards two scholarships

Two University of New Mexico students received Doris Gregory Memorial Journalism Scholarships.

Ludella Awad and Marco Torrez are both studying broadcast journalism with the goal of working in television.

While still in high school, Ludella wrote and published four books, including a poetry collection, "Sad Piano Music in Syria." She is a Daily Lobo advertising representative and has published articles in the Lobo, as well as the Albuquerque Journal. She is interested in all forms of journalism and writing including print journalism and photo journalism.

Marco served as an intern at KOB News 4. He hopes to work in television news, both nationally and internationally.

First Amendment Report

The U. S. Supreme Court agreed to hear seven First Amendment cases during the 2017-2018 term, writes former First Amendment Chair Sherri Burr. Among the most discussed cases involved gerrymandering in Wisconsin and Maryland, whether pregnancy centers have to give advice on abortion, and Masterpiece Cakeshop v. Colorado Civil Rights Commission, involving the right of a cake baker to refuse to make a cake for a gay couple. All cases will be decided by June 30th at the close of the term.

Also of interest: the continuing challenges to journalistic integrity under the guise of "fake news," an op-ed penned by retired justice John Paul Stevens urging the repeal of the Second Amendment that permits the right to carry arms, and Texas v. New Mexico v. Colorado, in which the Supreme Court granted the federal government the right to intervene to determine whether New Mexico had violated the Rio Grande Compact.

Chapter News

The Northern New Mexico Chapter's bimonthly luncheons have featured Collin Haffey, fire ecologist of the U.S. Geological Survey New Mexico Landscapes Field Station, talking about the impact of fires, the history of fires in the region, and the concept of "fire adapted communities." Author Melody Groves gave a presentation, "Westerns: Alive and Kickin'--Yee Haw!" Julie Ann Grimm, Santa Fe Reporter editor and publisher, talked about her newspaper in "Scrappy, Snarky and Strong," and Santa Fe New Mexican Editor Phill Casaus, shared his vision for the newspaper.

Albuquerque Press Women & Friends' monthly luncheons have heard Tara Gatewood, host of the KUNM talk show "Native America calling," discussed Native American issues. Former State Land Commissioner Ray Powell talked about public lands and the current campaigns for land commissioner. Linda Atkinson, founder of the DWI Resource Center, addressed the continuing problem of DWI in New Mexico. And Colin Baillio, policy director of Health Action New Mexico, discussed his organization's priorities.
